What Fracking Means for the World

A conversation with Michael A. Levi

Date: 16 July 2014

Time: 1:15 – 2:45 pm

Place: CR 4 (North Lawn Building)

UN Headquarters

Live webcast: webtv.un.org

Fracking, or hydraulic fracturing, has led to a boom in U.S. oil and gas production. What does this boom mean for economies, international security, and the environment? And where might it spread next?

Open to all

Please pre-register at <https://unaifracking.eventbrite.com>. Seating is on a first come- first served basis. Attendees without a United Nations pass should arrive at the United Nations entrance on First Avenue and 47th Street at 12: 45 pm where, after security screening, they will be escorted to the Conference Room.

Michael A. Levi is David M. Rubenstein Senior Fellow for Energy and the Environment and Director of the Maurice R. Greenberg Center for Geoeconomic Studies at the Council on Foreign Relations.

The Council on Foreign Relations is a US-based independent, nonpartisan membership think tank and publisher dedicated to being a resource on foreign policy choices facing the United States and other countries.
